Pope Receives Jews For 'Fruitful' Talks; 2 Issues Unresolved

By Loren Jenkins CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy Pope John Paul II met here Tuesday with international Jewish leaders to defuse the dispute he triggered by granting an audience to President Kurt Waldheim of Austris eather this summer. Representatives of both the Catholic and the Jewish delegations in talks that one participant termed "friendly, timely, positive and Imitful" expressed satisfaction that important progress had been made in reducing tension that had threatened to mar the pope's visit the United States this month.

The mere fact that the pope would meet with them in a "giveand-take" cooversation, rather than a formal audience where prepared statements are exchanged, was considered significant and even historic by the Jewish leaders.

"This was a very important meeting," said Rabbi Mordechai Waxman, chairman of the International Jewish Committee for Interreligious Consultations. "It raises the Catholic-Jewish relationship to a new plateau and makes possible a better relationship in the future."

On two main issues raised by the mostly-American, nine-member delegation from the committee, however, there was no agreement: the questions of why the pope met with Mr. Waldheim and the Vatican's refusal to recognize the state of Israel.

"We respectfully have different views," said a committee member, Rabbi Gilbert Klaperman, president of the Synagogue Council of America. "We agreed in our discussions to disagree agreeably."

When the Waldheim audience was announced, the Vatican said the pope was receiving Mr. Waldheim, at the Austrian's repeated 4(CESS 17: request, as the elected leader of a mainly Roman Catholic country.

The Austrian president has been accused of concealing the extent of his role as an officer in the German Army in the Balkans during World War II.

As a result of the meeting in June, many American Jewish leaders had threatened to boycott a meeting with the pope scheduled for Sept. 11 in Miami.

Despite the fact that the pope did not apologize for meeting Mr. Waldheim or offer to recognize Israel, the Jewish leaders said they were cheered by other signs that he was sensitive to Jewish concerns. They said he would be well-received by the U.S. Jewish commu-

They cited the Vatican's willing-ness to discuss the problem with them, its promise of a church document on the Holocaust and the causes of anti-Semitism, and an agreement to revise the mechanisms for Jewish-Catholic dialogue on sensitive issues.

The document, to be prepared by the Vatican's Commission for Reli-gious Relations With the Jews, in consultation with Jewish leaders, is to be written after a meeting of the International Catholic Jewish Liaison Committee io Washington. At the meeting in December the committee is to discuss the Holocaust "in all its religious and historical

Under his gavel, the city has legalized the sale of ice cream cones, provided more public toilets, built new stairways down to the beach and expedited previously stalled efforts to expand Carmel's library.

Mr. Eastwood bas proved to be a shrewd political operator, appointing the publisher of the local newspaper, a potential source of criticism, to a vacancy on the City Planning Commission and a prominent critic of his policies to another. He seems to have taken his job seriously.

Seldom a week passes when the mayor is not photographed conducting his ceremonial duties, such as presenting a citation to a city employee for dedicated service or accepting a donation for local youth

Even his critics say the mayor is likable and eager to do a good job. Yet some Carmel residents are urging him not to run for re-election when his term ends in April because, they say, his celebrity status is attracting more tourists than can be absorbed by the mile-square city, which even in pre-Eastwood days was a popular weekend destination.

"As a human being, I think the mayor is affable, an absolutely unpretentious person," said Jim Holliday, chairman of the Carmel Residents Association.

Rebellion Leaves Mozambique a Stricken Country

By Richard Bernstein

KARUNGA, Mozambique The rusty ferryboat, loaded with Red Cross supplies and too many passengers, made a serpentine course on what they call the River of Good Signs, chugging past fla-mingoes and pelicans and lone men in dugout canoes. The boat pulled up to a flat, muddy bank lined by a crowd of people suddenly gathered under the coconut palms.

There were young mothers so thin they could scarcely nurse their infants, men whose spindly legs stuck out from tattered shorts, children with hollow eyes and distended bellies. They are the displaced persons of Mozambique's continung civil war. They are bere amidst the stucco ruins of a Portuguese settler's farm to be sustained by gifts of Western grain, elothing, soap and medicine. By any standard, Mozambique, torn by the decade-old civil war, is in desperate shape, badly in need of sustenance from the outside.

Rise of Small Publishers

New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Publishers with names like Pharos Books, Hill & Co., Thunder's Mouth, and Acropolis are still a long way from rivaling Random House and Simon & Schuster, but they and other small U.S. book publishers are beginning to make their presence felt in a big way. Small presses will publish more books this year by name authors and on important subjects, than in any recent year.

Pharos recently published "The Birth Dearth," the widely discussed new book by the social commentator Ben Wattenberg, which warns that a falling birth rate poses a threat to the West.

Hill & Co., of Boston, will soon publish "A World Too Wide," the latest novel of Gregory Macdon-ald, who created the Fletch mysteries and bas written 18 books, most of them for major publishers.

Thunder's Mouth Press will soon ublish "Jacob's Ladder," a novel by John A. Williams, who has published 16 books with some of the best-known publishing houses in

Baker speculates that he might be underated because the world of jazz "may not be ready for a redneck trumpet player" — he was born in Oklahoma — or that maybe he makes it sound too easy. Baker clones play lean lines with a similar introverted sound, but a close listen reveals a large distance. His choice of notes and their articulation puts him in a place of his own. Fame came in 1953 when Baker joined Gerry Mulligan's groundbreaking piano-less quartet. He won Down Beat, Metronome and Playboy magazine polls throughout the '50s. He also sang with a lost little boy voice ("My Funny Valentine") which attracted groupies. A pretty country boy with doomed carma, he was compared to Bix Beiderbecke and James Dean. Fueled in part by the "great white hope" syndrome, he could have been a contender. He generated a considerable cult following. After his good friend - and by now fellow myth - the pianist Dick Twardzik died of a drug overdose at 24. Baker also began to suffer from drug-abuse, critical backlash and public indifference. He spent several years in an Italian jail on a narcoucs conviction, lost his teeth in a San Francisco brawl, learned to play with dentures (a torturous process) and started a comeback with a highly praised Carnegie Hall reunion with Mulligan in 1974. Reviewing it, the critic John S. Wilson wrote that Baker when Baker plays a blue note it's had developed "more range and blue," assertiveness within the wistfully ruminative style with which he has always been associated." When on, Baker is one of the look out, there's a little white cat when off, it's more frustrating than disastrous. His career cannot be called orchestrated. He records whenever he needs money. There are too many Chet Baker records in the bins. The odds are against the uninformed buyer. Two albums on Criss Cross, a Danish label, can be recommended: "Cbet's Choice" (1985) with the Belgians Philip Catherina on guitar and Jean-Louis Rassinfosse on bass (including a stunning "Love For Sale") and "Blues For a Reason" (1984) with the tenorman Warne Marsh. They showcase Baker's trademark contrapuntal lines with Catherine and Marsh, reminiscent of Baker with Mulligan. The surprising interest in jazz on the part of the post-punk generation has included a modest Chet Baker revival. He solos on Elvis Costello's "Shipbuilding." The young rock singer Chris Isaak ad-mires him as "the real thing." Most of his work is in Europe. The French like him. An ex-sideman says: "Chet tends to leave for the next gig in the wrong direction. He'll come to Paris from Brussels by way of Amsterdam, for example, on time if all goes well. Sometimes the pay wasn't what it was supposed to be, or when, but there were so many magic moments, they made everything else wortbwhile."

Baker, undernourished, underrated. A Fragmented Drama of AIDS 'As Is'

By Sheridan Morley International Herald Tribune ONDON — Early in 1985, when the fullhorror of the AIDS catastrophe had finally dawned on the United States, two plays about it opened in New York within weeks of each other. Far and away the better of the two was Larry Kramer's "The Normal Heart, in wante a government and pain, at natistic scream of rage and pain, at the cricis had thus far been mal Heart," in which a great jourthe way the crisis had thus far been handled politically and medically, was allowed to escape from a script which indicted Mayor Koch; President Reagan, The New York Times and sundry other public monu-ments for coming too little and too late to the rescue of a gay commu-- nity that had already been decimat-

Why it should have taken William Hoffman's "As Is" more than two 'years to reach London is hard to estimate, given that, in contrast to Kramer's play, this is a 90-minute : doset drama of extreme good taste .. which manages to pussyfoot - ... around its awful subject while demanding no great political or social change of heart or attitude.

Indeed Hoffman does not wish "As Is" to be considered primarily as an AIDS play at all, labeling it "a love story" and wondering whether Ibsen would have liked "Ghosts" to be known primarily as a play about venereal disease. It is a brave question, because "Gnosts" is a masterpiece about many things and "As Is," despite Chris Bond's agile production, remains an oddly sketchy, fragmented and unfinished attempt to do poetically what Kramer realized could only be done factually at this stage in a continuing tragedy. Hoffman's central figures are -Rich (nervily well played by George Costigan), an upwardly mobile young writer, and Saul (a butch, avuncular David Fielder). the discarded lover to whom Rich returns when he discovers that he is dying. Around them, all played by a versatile supporting quinter, Hoffman has ranged relatives, muses, doctors, friends and social workers, most of whom are inclined to give cozy little chats to the audience in the absence of any real dramatic conflict.

Help Shore Up Aquino

revolution, and particularly in a country that is poor, even hy Third World standards. Corazon Aquino's democracy in the Philippines is under challenge from both right and left. Great numbers of Filipinos rvidently believed that the corrupt Marcos autarchy was an important part of the explanation of the country's condition and reasoned that its overthrow would bring a great and dramatic change in their standard of living. But while the economy has been growing, the improvement has not yet been substantial. Mrs. Aquino is struggling with the sense of disappointment that is the aftermath of revolutionary euphoria.

The attempted coup by dissident soldiers last week was the fifth since she came to office 18 months ago. On the left she faces not only an entrenched communist insurgen-cy but increasingly radical labor protests. Two days before the coup, the left organized the first general strike since the revolution. It was a demonstration against higher fuel prices and took place after Mrs. Aquino, in response in a wave of transport strikes, had already rescinded half of the increase. The size of the strikes suggested that the left, badly beaten in the legislative elections in May, is gaining strength by exploiting dissat-isfaction with slow economic progress. Gasoline is not a commodity that ought to be subsidized by the government of a country whose people are mostly peasants, and mostly in great poverty. But the cines are sensitive in its price, and in this test of wills the organizers of the strikes were able to throw Mrs. Aquino off balance. In the last few days she seems to have recovered, under the far greater pressure of the dissident offi-cers' plot to overthrow and, it appears, to assassinate her. Now that she has the initiative again, what is she to do with it?

Economic growth is going to be crucial. The United States, with Japan, the World Bank and others, is sending aid. There is a strong case for sending more of it, and for purposes that will show effects more quickly. Otherwise there will be a rising danger of a vicious circle as slow economic growth aggravates political disorder, and as political disorder frightens off the kind of investment, by both Filipinos and foreigners, that is required for faster growth. If the rich countries of the world want to show their support for a new democracy under great strain, this is the moment to do it.

The Miners Didn't Lose

A labor strike that lasts three weeks and produces a contract only marginally better than could have been had without a strike ordinarily would be considered a failure. Yet Cyril Ramapbosa, the leader of South Africa's black mine workers, smiled Monday, and rightly so, as his members returned to the gold and coal pits.

An adversary explained it best. "To take very large numbers of people out on strike and keep them out for three weeks is an achievement," said Bobby Godsell, chief of labor relations for the Anglo American Corp., South Africa's mining giant.

The achievement is all the greater when the deck is stacked in management's favor and workers have nothing to sustain them except their own fervor and sense of mission. By holding the line against such odds, the black miners demonstrated that if they cannot yet shape a settlement, they can inflict great costs, Sucb power commands respect. No previous strike by the five-year-old National Union of Mineworkers had lasted even 48 bours. This one was a success from the outset, when more than 200,000 black miners walked out to back a demand for a 30 percent pay raise. The average black miner earns $250 a month, a third of what white miners make for the same work. Eventually, more than 250,000 black miners joined the strike and closed down or disrupted production at half of South Africa's gold mines and a quarter of its coal mines. The mining companies may have lost as much as $225 million.

The union suffered too. Nine miners were killed, 300 were wounded and more than 400 were arrested in strike-related violence. But discipline held sufficiently strong.

In the end, the union accepted wage increases of 15 to 23 percent, the amount initially offered by management. The only concrete gains from the strike were improvements in holiday pay and death benefits. These benefits are not negligible; hundreds die in South African mines each year, Monday, at least nine men died when an elevator plunged to the bottom of a mine shaft,

In perhaps the most critical part of strike strategy, the union leadership had the wisdom not to give the South African government an excuse to intervene, as some hardliners would have liked. Mr. Ramaphosa indicated in recent interviews that he was under no illusion that economic justice for blacks was ultimately achievable without political justice. But for the moment, they must be pursued separately and incrementally, So the union leaders could say, credibly, that the strike and the settlement were not a defeat, but "part of the struggle to win all the demands that have been set." -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

So late one afternoon he bowed out.

When the campaigning for the Republican nomination began last year, each candidate was trying to establish himself as the logical successor to Ronald Reagan. Mr. Laxalt is often called Mr. Reagan's best friend in politics, and bas been one of his most loyal supporters since they were governors of California and Nevada 20 years ago. He won the support of some key Reagan campaign aides. But he did not do so well among Republican contributors.

Mr. Lazalt's supporters can argue that Republican contributors would have been wiser to give Mr. Bush less and Mr. Laxalt more, and they can complain that Mr. Bush started earlier and with other advantages. But everyone knew the rules from the beginning.

Since the Iran-contra scandal broke, the Republican race has changed from a contest to claim the Reagan mantle to an argument over who is best qualified for the presidency in his own right. This is the right argument, and it is far from over.

Time to Pack Up the Cameras

South Africa is winning the war of images, and that is changing the way the entire world looks at the human struggle there. In the name of more accurate and sensitive coverage, perhaps the time bas come for Western news organizations, specifically American network news operations, to say "enough" to the government in Pretoria and to pick up our marbles and go home.

The current state of emergency, in effect for more than a year, severely limits what publications and broadcasts can say. More significantly for television, the rigid prohibitions extend to pictures. We cannot broadcast or even shoot pictures of any unrest, which is defined by South African authorities. We cannot show police or security forces acting in their official capacity trying to "keep the peace."

The point is not what the media can no longer do, it is what the public no longer sees. The American consciousness about South Africa was formed and maintained by the constant relevision images of brutal repression: the image of the padded, faceless policeman, club raised; the image of a black youth with fear covering his face.

Yet the recent strike by black miners was reported almost as a routine labor story. Never mind that workers have been herded out of company-owned housing and sent away. Never mind that miners have been shot and killed by authorities under mysterious circumstances. Because we cannot see pictures of these incidents, it is harder to comprehend what is going on. I wonder if the American people wouldn't be better served if the networks were thrown out of South Africa or just left on their own. There would probably be many sources for pictures of the events that we can no longer legally record or broadcast. We smuggle pictures out of Afghanistan. We could do the same in South Africa. Pretoria knows that Perhaps that is why we are still there.

Africa: AIDS Puts a Deadly Lid on Population Growth

WASHINGTON — AIDS has spread so fast in Africa that Western analysts are scrambling to decide whether overpopulation still remains the huge cloud on Africa's horizon, or whether an AfDS pandemie may leave the continent severely underpopulated in this century.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome has spread so fast that many of the millions of Africans now infected have never heard of it.

U.S. intelligence analysts recently concluded that underpopulation will be a greater problem this century than overpopulation. That may seem a convenient conclusion for an administration that argues against the need to support family planning pro-grams. Still, the forecast of an African pandemic is not only convenient but, sadly, bolstered by fact. Statistics on AIDS in Africa are inadequate and misleading. A majority of AIDS cases reported to the World Health Organization come from the United States, but health officials believe Africa has more cases and more people infected. In some regions, enough is known to suggest a ghastly picture: As many as 25 percent of adults in parts of Rwanda may have the AIDS virus. It is estimated that half the people of Kampala. Uganda, could die of AIDS in the next decade.

to be beierosexual and not drug users. British researchers report that a high percentage of Africans possess a genetic variation that seems to leave them especially defenseless against the virus. But there are other reasons.

Many African children have contracted AfDS: many were given blood transfusions for malariacaused anemia, only to get AIDS from contaminated blood or syringes. And a year ago, doctors were reporting that 60 percent of all prostitutes in Kenya - and 90 percent in

Rwanda - had the AIDS virus. Not all African countries have been hit equally hard by AIDS. Somalia has less of an AfDS problem than neighboring Kenya. The Somalis frown on promiscuity, and render it more difficult through the borren-dous practice of female infibulation. Another reason may be genetic differences between the Somalis and the

Bantu peoples farther south. While AIDS may yet strike Somalia, the greater threat there now is ject is raised. But Western specialists

In the countryside, vegetation disappears at alarming rates. Acacia trees go for charcoal, the only fuel; goats and camels eat the rest. Regions described decades ago as the nomads' Arcadia are now desert. The Somalis' proud pastoral democracy has become a society dependent on foreign aid.

Flying west across Africa, one finds the same loss of trees, grass and soil, the same encroaching desert.

There are African leaders who understand these problems. In Kenya, where the birthrate may be even high-er than in Somalia. threat at his country's peril. A complicating factor has been the emotional overtones connected with AfDS. Africans resented their continent being labeled the hirthplace of AIDS, as they did the implication that AIDS indicated widespread homosexuality in Africa.

Less than two years ago Kenyan authorides seized about 300 copies of the International Herald Tribune because it contained an article saying that many African governments were reinctant to confirm the existence of AIDS in their countries. More recently, officials in the Central African Republic destroyed a French television crew's film of AIDS victims in a portant needs, although a surfeit of bachelor's degrees often goes along with a dearth of repairmen. These people may eventually sup-ply the leadership to solve many of Africa's problems, but they will still need outside help —on AfDS and on promoting better political structures, another important concern. The West would do well to put more money into educating Africans, at the expense of the still common hightechnology projects that work only as long as an American or European contractor sticks around.

Once, toward evening, we were driving across the great roadless Daror plain in northeastern Somalia, into a blue-black thunderstorm. There had been no rain on the Daror for two years — and we hoped for a downpour. But all we knew was that the way ahead was dark, and there was no certainty whether we would eventually find a country freshened by good rain - or one deceived and more desperate after wind and a few drops. So it is today in Africa: The immediate future is dark; no one can be sure what lies beyond.

The writer is a former U.S. ambassador to Somalia. He contributed this comment to the Los Angeles Times,

It's Time for All to Shed Their Blinders

THE Western world has, until now, tended to concern itself little with the political or economic health of Africa, perpetuating instead a superficial view... in part because of perceived self-interest in thus maintaining their own economic and political dominance. We are entering an era, however, in which even the United States is having to recognize global economic independence... It may not be long before the need to strengthen African economies may be viewed as essential to healthy First World economies . .

Africans, meanwhile, will need to dispense with myths they hold dear, not least because in doing so they will start a process that will in itself dispel the surviving myths about them in the Western world. It is the Africans who need urgently to shed their blinders about the essential challenges of economic, social and political development. They must come to accept that an unjust international order will not change simply because of the euphony of their own thetorie or the indignation accompanying their moral pressure.

know what is happening in some dark corners of the world — until, as with the late Ethiopian famine, tragedy is belatedly revealed. The sort of belp that good hearts then poured into Ethiopia changed none of the underlying causes of disaster, which may therefore soon be repeated.

From self-interest, and from buman solidarity, the rich have to stand ready to aid intelligently, when they can. But comfortable television viewers and newspaper readers must be prepared, in these coming years, for appalling news from places they have hardly heard of. Their own relative ease has been hard-won, over centuries, not so much by the efforts of rulers as by the slow growth of a sense of belonging together. When that collapses, something hellish follows.

The Gurgles You Hear From Dixie

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON —On the morn-W ing after Senator Sam Nunn announced that he would not seek the Democratic presidential nomination, that other notable noncandidate. Mario Cuomo, was on the phone to this reporter. No, the New York governor was not reconsidering; far from it. His message was that even without the Georgia senator, the Democrats have terrific candidates. "An embar-rassment of niches" was his phrase. and he said it without laughing.

But what really caught my ear was his casual remark that be would probably announce his own favorite in February. The AFL-CIO, the largest U.S. labor organization, is likely to reconsider its delayed endorsement decision right after the Feb. 8 fowa caucuses and the Feb. 16 New Hampshire primary. Would it not be interesting if the Democratic Party's most prominent governor and its largest in-terest group threw their weight behind the winner of the New Hampshire primary, in which Governor Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts is the early favorite, just as he heads into the March 8 "super primary" involving 14
Southern and border states?

The gurgles you hear in the back-ground are from the designers of the super primary, choking on their own naïveté. They persuaded all the Dixie legislatures to set up primaries March 8 in hopes of diminishing the impor-tance of Iowa and New Hampshire and reducing the influence of the serand reducing the influence of the party's liberal interest groups and leaders.

It was always a dubious idea, as at least one prominent Dixie Democrat. Don Fowler. South Carolina's veteran national committeeman, kept say-ing. Now, with Senator Nunn gone, it is likely to backfire on the moderate conservatives who designed it. By picking a date soon after the New Hampshire vote, they enhanced the "halo effect" surrounding the winper of that primary. That might have been all right, had there been a South-erner who could, as Jimmy Carter did in 1976, sneak off with a plurality victory in New Hampshire, But the architects of the "Southern strategy" neglected the most vital ingredient.

They failed to secure a candidate. Former Governor Charles Robb of Virginia, an assiduous promoter of the super primary, told those who urged him to run, "I'm not ready to be president." His modesty was appearable of the super primary to the super primary, told those who urged him to run, "I'm not ready to be president." His modesty was appearable of the super production of the super primary to super production of the super production of the super production of the super production of the super primary to super production of the super primary to super primar pealing, but it did not help. So Mr. Nunn became the South's white hope, until he, too, backed out.

You cannot blame him. Defense issues, his forte, have never been useful in peacetime campaigns. People are happy to have a president who under-stands the technicalities of the defense budget, but they do not want to hear him explain them in every speech. The cautious Georgian knew that many of his domestic policy views placed him far outside the mainstream of the national Democratic Party. He was skeptical about whether the Washington establishment figures urging him to run could actually deliver delegates at the Democratic convention.

It is late in the game for anyone else to get into the race, so the power brokers of the South will have to make do with three border-state contenders: Senators Albert Gore Jr. of Tennessee and Joseph Biden of Delaware, and Representative Richard Gephardt of Missouri, all of whom have more than once lapsed into liberalism.

The odds are that many conservative whites in the South will decide they would have a better chance of finding their kind of president in the Republican primary. In eight of the Dixie states they are free to vote across party lines March 8.

The more of them who leave, the higher the proportion of blacks and liberals remaining in the Dixie Democratic primaries - and that portion is high already, as Mr. Fowler unavailingly has pointed out.

That should help the candidate
Mr. Cuomo and the AFL-CIO find in

New Hampshire. But he will be hard put to beat the Reverend Jesse Jackson of South Carolina, surely the one Southerner the designers of the super primary did not aim to assist. Mr. Jackson is waging a nonracist

George Wallace campaign — blasting multinational corporations and greedy Wall Street operators; appealing to the sense of injustice and insecurity among farmers, textile and steel workers, taxi drivers and beauticisms.

With those folks voting, his populist rhetorie and appeal to blacks give him a real shot at zooming into the lead in the Democratic delegate race March 8. The Southern primary will not settle the identity of the Democratte nominee. But its designers have to reflect on the flaws in their scheme that are likely to boost Jesse Jackson, the candidate with the least chance of carrying Dixie in November.

You He Sifting the Ashes in Arcadia From D To See What We Can Save

By A.M. Rosenthal

N EW YORK — The house that burned down in Arcadia, Florida, was our house. The fire out our own lives in peril and it is we, you and I, who now must search through the ashes to see what can be saved.

This is the only sane and practical way Americans can look at the fire last week that wiped out the home where three little boys who had the AIDS virus lived with their parents.

It is not known yet whether the fire was caused by arson or was an accident. If it was arson, it probably was the work of one or two individuals, not the entire town. Perhaps it was an accident, just a terrible coincidence. Either way it focused the attention of the country on Arcadia and one American family, to Arcadia and one American family, to which the plague of AIDS brought the plagues of hate and ignorance.

The family has had a belivful, a lifetime full, of hurt. They were driven from their church congregation. School gates were closed to their boys and they sufficient the control and they are their chief. lered the enunty and threats of their neighbors. They believe the fire was arson and they are going to leave Arcadia. But the rest of us cannot leave Arca-dia; it is part of our lives and futures

now. To leave - to turn away, forget or diminish it as something that happened in one small farm town in one county in the state of Florida -- would not simply be cruel-hearted; it would be stupid and self-destructive. It would give up in adyance the one weapon most important in the struggle against the plague, the weapon of individual ethic and responsihility. Without it, we are lost. Clifford and Louise Ray have three sons, 8, 9 and 10 years old, who suffer from hemophilia. It is an inherited disin ease that prevents blood from clotting. Treatment of the disease requires transfusions of blood products. It was through these transfusions that the three boys were infected with the AIDS virus. That must have happened at least three years ago, before the virus was identified and steps taken to prevent infected blood from getting into supplies for hemophiliacs. Those with the virus live with fear of getting the disease itself; if they do, they die, i ned a law.

.The virus can be transmitted through blood or semen in sexual intercourse with an infected partner. In the United States, the sexual infection is almost always conveyed through intercourse with an injected homosexual partner. It is out only a homosexual problem; in Alrica the plague is also heterosexual. The incidence of heterosexual transmission is rising in some European countries. And AIDS is spread through exchange of miected blood, usually among drug addicts using the same needles.

In Arcadia, the local school board barred the boys. Their parents fought and a federal court opened the gates. There was a boycott: The mayor and others took their children out of the school. Threats and warnings came, then, on Friday, the fire.

As Joo Nordheimer of The New York Times reported, Arcadians think of themselves as quite decent and ordinary, and perhaps they are. That is what makes it so frightening. Quite decent and ordinary Americans simply ignored all scientific and medical adice that there was oo chance of their children getting AIDS from the Ray boys and made them pariahs, driving them from school and church.

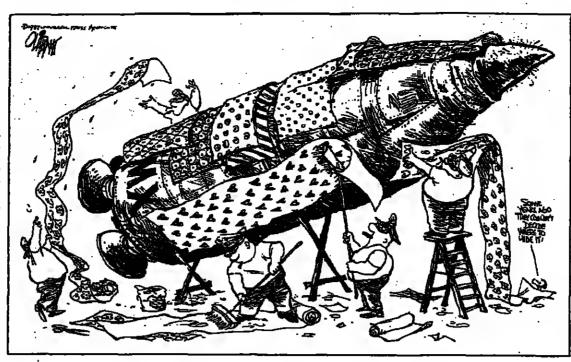

Suppose one of the Ray boys had cbleed and some other child touched the blood with a wounded hand. There is no known case of a hemophiliac ever transmitting the virus this way. The theoretical possibility does not justify the social excommunication of a family except to those fearful and selfconcerned to the point of neurosis.

AIDS specialists say that the greatest current priority in the fight against AIDS is to educate against the danger of etting it - and the danger of unjustified fear of contamination.

Against those who spread AIDS through narcotics or prostitution, and who may be beyond reason or ethic, the recourse of society is the law. But the one great truth of the plague is that the most effective way to fight it is for every person who believes he may have been exposed to be tested and then for those who have contracted the virus to make the ethical decision not to bave sexual intercourse with the unaffected.

Without this individual commitment. the plague will spread. But to persuade the individual to carry out this ethical commitment, society cannot ostracize, punish or hound the sufferers.

That is the social compact of compassion and self-interest between the suffercr and society that must be created to bridge the years, perhaps decades, before a cure or vaccine is found. Uotil that compact we are all in Arcadia. The New York Times.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Behind the Mecca Rioting

Your reports on the Mecca riot and. I must say, my journalistic colleagues writing about them, seem to have missed what is the most important factor behind that tragic event.

This is that the confrontation was oot essencially — I repeat, essentially — just between Iran and Saudi Arabia, or between Sunni Islam and Shiism, but beween Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and his cierical regime and the word of God as given in the Koran. In the holy book it is forbidden to indulge io argument or disputation or anger or violence during the hajj, which is a religious occasion and a time for prayer and peaceful devotion. That has been the traditional behavior of the hajj pilgrims for 1,300 years. But Ayatollah Khomeini and his followers have deliberately rejected not just the traditional hajj behavior but the Koranic mjunctions themselves by staging political demonstrations. This is why the mass of Sunni Moslems worldwide, not involved in the Saudi-Iran dispute, have seen the Iranian action in Mecca as a heretical desecration. This also means that the original mistake was made by the Saudis seven years ago when, as guardians of the holy places, they should have insisted on the Iranian pilgrims obeying the Koran and so refused them permission to hold any sort of political demonstration during the haji. This year the Saudi aothorities did try to persuade the Iranians to conform to correct hajj behavior. Thus, when they reached agreement on guide-lines for the demonstration (which was a wrong step in the first place) they said that 10,000 demonstrators should wear the ihram, the simple white garment of the pilgrims. Presumably they hoped this symbol would remind the Iranians to behave like pilgrims. The Iranian rioters ignored this stipulation, many turning up in khaki uniforms. When rioting started, the Saudi police used loud-speakers to remind the Iranians of the Koranic rules, but it was too late.

The biographical note on Mushahid Hussain, author of the opinion column "An Eyewitness Account of Mecca's Bloody Afternoon" (Aug. 24), whom I know personally, should have mentiooed that he is a Shiite and that he is an ardent supporter of the Iranian "revolution." These are personal facts but relevant to any assessment of his account. Incidentally, I have seen no explanatioo of how more than 80 Saudi security men got themselves killed, many with stab wounds. Were these self-inflicted. or the work of the peaceful Iranians? G.H. JANSEN.

During the 28 years I have lived in Western Europe, it is my distinct impression that the Uoited States bas become two nations: the modern industrial ooe in which many Americans live quite well, and a very sizable developing country characterized by slums such as are scarcely found in Northern Europe, unemployment, illiteracy, lack of access to primary health care and. in some places, woefully inadequate public transportation. The Tyranny of Team Play: Breaking the Rules to Win provided us with allegories that help us understand the greater game of life - its temptations, tribulations and triumphs. But now sports may be teaching us a terribly wrong lesson.

By Albert Ritzenberg

The Duke of Wellington, we are told, was convinced that the Battle of Waterloo "was won on the playing fields of Eton," The sportswriter Grantland Rice believed that God keeps score in life and you won or lost, but how you played the game." The football coach Vince Lombardi, who is mistakenly quoted as saying, "Winniog isn't everything — it's the only thing," did say, "Winning isn't everything, but wanting to win is."

More recently, another concept rooted in sports, the value of "team play," has become a staple of applied morals, taught with inspectional account with unquestioned acceptance in American schools and in the sports world.

Watching a well-drilled team, it is easy to understand the meaning, and the attraction, of being a "team player." Cooperation is essential to success. Players are responsible to one another and do oot let their teammates down. They learn their designated roles and perform them with precision. Praise comes to the unselfish person — the basketball player who forgoes glory by not attempting a low-percentage shot, passing off instead to a teammate who has a better chance.

In individual sports, by contrast, contestants are responsible mainly to themselves, and they play by the traditions and ethics of the sport. (Sadly, some of these traditions and ethics are eroding as sports becomes big husiness.) In tennis, except for rare occasions, the individual player not only is trainer, coach and contestant but occasionally is umpire, too, making close calls that can determine the outcome of a game or a tournament. Wearing these many hats requires the utmost discipline and honor. On crucial decisions, there is great temptation to call a play in one's favor, but it rarely happens. In team competition, calling a foul on one's self is unheard of, We would collapse in astonishment to see a football player approach a game official and say, I stepped out of bounds when I caught that pass, though you couldn't see it from your position." His teammates, in a communal call for unity and team spirit, no doubt would knit their shoelaces into a ASHINGTON — Sports has long oversized neck from the nearest goalpost. Team spirit demands that, in most instances, players cannot let down their mates, even in observing their own codes of cooduct. I have seen individual sports, when played on a team basis, turn in the same direction. In college, my tennis teammates frequently complained about another team; they felt it miscalled an inordinate number of decisions. Years later, when I was a college coach, we had the same school on MEANWHILE our schedule, and again my players complained that its varsity frequently cheated. Finally, as the father of a college varsity player, I saw my son's team play that same school, and once more there was cheating. I saw one opposing player run into the net, yet fail to announce, as is proper and usual, that he had done so and should lose the point. One of his faculty advisers saw this violation but justified it by saying something to the effect that the player's opponent was foot-faulting. The team pressure was so great that the player was breaking the rules of honor to win, and his superiors were condoning it.

Statesmen and politicians constantly expound on the merits of being a team player. Do they mean that someone who and chears to further the team is performing an honorable duty? Should a team player keep quiet about a crime because it is his own team that is guilty? Should whistle-blowers be harassed for "ratting" on the team instead of going along with its corruption or inefficiency? This is an age of wrongdoing: Watergate, the My Lai massacre, corporate scandals, the Iran-contra affair. How many of those involved in these scandals justified themselves as team players?

Teamwork at its best - co and assistance for one another in a worthy purpose — is highly meritorious. But team athletics can too easily become destructive. Mob psychology and peer pres-sure are extremely strong, and individual-ism can be smothered. A person who is not made of the very strongest moral fiber may find himself or herself showing the worst aspects of team sports: just going along and never rocking the boat. The message is important for parents. They should think carefully before pushing children into team sports. Esprit de corps is fine, as long as it does not deprive individual of rational thought

An Australian Magazine Pursues U.S. Teen-Agers

By GERALDINE FABRIKANT

EW YORK - On the premise that teen-agers are more sophisticated than the magazines aimed at them. John Fairfax Ltd., Australia's powerful magazine company, is starting Sassy, the American version of Dolly, sful monthly for the teen-age market.

Like Dolly, Sassy is aimed at people 14 to 19 years old. It attempts to be more contemporary in its fashion approach than other U.S. publications and more direct about such issues as sex-The prototype issue, for example, has an article entitled "Sex for

"I think the other teen magazines are not really addressing the things that interest teenagers," said Helen Barr, the publisher. "We are giving them good, solid information about relationships and sexu-

The campaign theme, echoing Ms. Barr's conviction that icen-agers are increasingly aware, is "I'm too Sassy to read Toen."

Ms. Barr said advertiser response bad been positive. A fourcolor page costs about $6,950, and Sassy is guaranteeing an initial rate base of 250,000, hoping to build that to 400,000.

But the magazine's frankness may have pitfalls. Leo Scullin of Young & Rubicam thinks that there is a niche for a new publication but that one challenge will be to overcome the puritanical nature of the American mother. Teen and Seventeen are highly successful, he said, and "they respect the Protestant ethic and the nature of the country."

Grey Advertising, in its first commercial for Mitsubishi's new Galant Sigma, has avoided close-ups of the $20,000 car. Instead, the car races sleekly through a crowded tunnel, then swerves dramatically onto a mirror-like surface.

"We didn't just want pictures of just another pretty car." said Peter Serchuk, vice president at Grey. "We wanted to emphasize

In the $1S million ad campaign, Mitsubishi is primarily challenging the Honda Acura, which sells for about $23,000. The strategy is to offer a luxury car with more options for less money.

In July, members of the Publisbers Information Bureau, repreenting most of the country's largest magazines, carried a total of 9,312.27 ad pages, a 6.4 percent increase over the previous year. Estimated revenues for the month were $320.6 million, a jump of 7.9 percent compared with July 1986.

Britain's WPP Group has acquired two more American communications concerns, Reese Communications Cos, and Targeting Systems, both in Arlington, Virginia.

Reese specializes in issues marketing, and Targeting Systems has been involved in commercial marketing, especially in demographic and attitude research. Both were created as consulting firms for political candidates, then began to serve corporations and associations. Combined revenues of the companies in the last fiscal year were about $14.4 million.

Indicators Rise 0.5% In U.S. But Construction

And Orders Slip

Compiled by Our Staff From Despatches WASHINGTON - The U.S. government's main economic forecasting gauge climbed in July for the sixth consecutive month, posting a 0.5 percent gain over the previous month that signaled continued moderate growth in the

But construction spending edged down in July by 0.2 percent com-pared with June, the Commerce Department reported. And U.S. manufacturers received fewer or-ders in July for the first time in six months, with demand falling 0.2 percent amid a sharp drop in Pentagon orders.

The department said that the advance in its Index of Leading Indicators matched the May perfor-mance and followed a revised ! percent gain in June. The June rose was originally reported at 0.8 per-

The index's six straight increases are its best performance since a similar run in late 1985 and early 1986. The gains have been cited by economists as evidence that the re-covery from the 1981-82 recession should last through the 1988 elec-

The 1 percent increase in June was the strongest rise since a 2.1 percent gain in December.

The index, which is a composite of 11 business statistics, got its biggest boost in July from a slowdown in deliveries by vendors. Slower de-liveries are taken as a sign of in-creasing demand, a favorable sign for the future.

Other forces boosting the index July were the huge gains in Wall reet stock prices; an increase in the prices of "sensitive materials," such as lumber and scrap metal, whose prices fluctuate with demand; and a minuscule rise in contracts and orders for plants and equipment

The most negative component on the index was a fall in manufacturers' orders for consumer goods, followed by a decline in building permits and slower growth in the

Annette Bénéteau Roux, the company's chief executive. Bénéteau Turns Rudder Toward U.S.

No. 1 Yacht Maker Wants More Than a 6% Beachhead

By Steven Greenhouse

Age 1 and Times Service
SAINT-HILAIRE-DE-RIEZ, France - When Annette Bénéteau Roux became chief executive officer of Beneteau, she was 22 years old and the company, which produced modest wooden fishing boats, was on the brink of going under. Mrs. Roux, now 45, has brought Chantiers Benéteau a long way since then. She has transformed the operation that her grandfather founded in 1884 into the world's leading manufacturer of sailing

But she sees one big problem. Her company holds only a 6 percent share of the U.S. yacht market, which is by far the world's largest. To keep Bénéteau at the top of the $900 million yacht industry, Mrs. Roux says that the company needs to raise that to 15 or 20 percent.

"My biggest wish is to succeed in the United States." Mrs. Roux said. "We're aiming for the Americanization of Beneteau." To that end, the company this year opened a $3.5 million yacht assembly plant in Marion, South Carolina, one of the French industry's first overseas plants.

The American competition is ready to prevent Mrs. Roux from expanding her beachhead. "Beneteau is going to have a far tougher time achieving what it would like to achieve in the American market because there's a renewed feistiness and aggressiveness on the part of many American boat builders," said Roger D. Hewson, president of Sabre Yachts, a leading United States boat builder based in South Casco, Maine.

The French yacht maker, based in this verdant resort town of 8,000 south of Brittany, made its mark by emphasizing sleek new designs and modern production methods at a time when most of the industry was snoozing. Bénéreau wowed the sailing world with trend-setting sailboats carrying price tags so low that they attracted customers who never thought of themselves as potential yacht

"When you're in the boat business, you're some-what in the toy business," said Jeff W. Napier, president of the International Council of Marine Industry Associations. "When you offer something new and interesting. like Beneteau did, you'll at-tract the consumer's attention,"

Indeed, the Beneteau juggernaut has put dozens of European boat builders out of business, and some Americans as well. Officials agree that no single outfit has shaken up the sailboat industry the way Beneteau has.

The world was ready for low-cost, attractive, mass-produced yachts," said J. Richard Johnson, the editor of Yachting World. "They marketed with an image far livelier and younger than the boats in the U.K. and U.S., and they went off like a

The result: Bénéteau, which is 72 percent family-owned with the rest traded on the Paris Bourse, has grown by 20 percent a year over the past decade, The company had revenue of $91 million last year and employs 1,100 people, up from $250,000 in revenue and just 17 employees when Mrs. Roux took the helm in 1964.

Although many builders turn out just one or two ozen yachıs a year. Beneteau makes more than 5,000 boats annually, ranging from 23-foot (7-meter) vessels priced at $15,000 to 51-footers that cost $300,000.

The Bénéteau story is all the more impressive because the company climbed to the top even as its See BENETEAU, Page 13

Consumers Help Bonn Post 1.5% Increase in GNP

By Ferdinand Protzman enal Herald Tribune

FRANKFURT - After six months of stagnation, the West German economy expanded a stronger-than-expected 1.5 percent in the second quarter as private consumption soared, the Federal Statistics Office said Tuesday.

It was the first growth registered in West German gross national product since the third quarter of 986. The figures, which are preliminary, are subject to revision and are adjusted for inflation and seasonal factors.

GNP measures the total output of a nation's goods and services.

The return to growth had been signaled last week by Economics Minister Martin Bangemann, who said that the second-quarter figures indicated the economy could still attain the government's forecast of 2 percent GNP growth for 1987.

German GNP grew 2.4 percent in 1986 and 2.5 percent in 1985, Many private economists, however, called Mr. Bangemann's prediction politically motivated and overly optimistic. They predicted GNP growth of between 0.5 and

1.5 percent for the year. The economy is growing again but much of the growth can be seen as recovery from a terrible first quarter," said Peter Pietsch, an economist at Commerzbank AG in Frankfurt. "For the year, we see no grounds to change our prediction of I percent GNP growth."

Preliminary figures also released Tuesday showed that the GNP grew 0.8 percent in the second quarter from its year-earlier level.

Without adjustment for seasonal factors. GNF growth would have been only I percent in the second quarter from the first three months, the spokesman said. He also said that the year-to-year rise was skewed because of the unusually robust 3.5 percent growth recorded in the second quarter of 1986.

The second-quarter figures confirmed government and private economists' contentions that higher private consumption has replaced exports as the economy's driving force.

Consumer demand for goods rose 2.3 percent in the second quarter from a year earlier and was up 3 percent from the first three months of this year.

The Deutsche mark's strength against the U.S. dollar continued to weigh on the export sector as exports of goods and services fell 2.6 percent in the second quarter com-pared with the 1986 period, but were up 2.5 percent in the second quarter from the first. Imports were unchanged in the second quarter from a year earlier. after rising 5.9 percent in the first quarter. But imports climbed 6.5 percent in the second quarter from the previous quarter.

U.K. Deficits On Trade Widen Sharply

By Warren Gerler

LONDON — Britain's deficit on its current account, the broadest measure of trade, widened sharply to £310 million ($505 million) in July from a downward revised £140 million shortfall in June, the Department of Trade and Industry said Tuesday.

The July figure, which was more than £100 million bigger than most analysts had expected, reflects a continuing deterioration in Britain's overall trade position in the second quarter of 1987. The June current account deficit was originally reported as £168 million.

The merchandise trade figure, the major component of the current account, widened to a seasonally adjusted deficit of £910 million in July, from a downward revised £740 million in June, as imports continued to grow faster than ex-

Analysis had been expecting a merchandise trade deficit of about £800 million, after a June figure originally reported as £768 million. The current account figure includes merchandise plus such service items as insurance and travel.

Imports grew 7.7 percent to a record £7.69 billion in July, from £7.14 billion in June, while exports

Members of the International Cocoa Agreement meet Wednesday to try to agree on the so-called buffer stock mechanism, which is used to sell cocoa when it becomes too expensive and buy it when it is roo cheap. The talks are due to end Sept. 11. Producers are anxious to revive the buffer stock, which was frozeo in June after its manager made large purchases to support the market. Consumers oppose more buffer buying until the price at which it purchases cocoa is lowered.

Atlas to Shut Down Uranium Mines in U.S.

PRINCETON. New Jersey — Atlas Corp. said Tuesday that it plans to close its uranium operations and sell some other units to concentrate on precious metals.

The company said that, as a result of the shutdown — the result of the continuing depression in the domestic uranium industry — it has taken a charge of $51.9 million against earnings for the year coded June 30, causing a net loss of $52.2 million, compared with a loss; of $2.8 million the year before. For the year. revenue rose 50 percent to $24.8 million from $16.1 million.

Atlas said it estimates the cash costs of closing the uranium operations will be substantially less than the $2.5 million a year that it bas been spending to maintaio the operations on a stand-by basis.

The company also said it has found gold at its Gold Ridge project in Nevada, where drilling to date indicates at least 100,000 ounces of probable geological gold reserves, exploration is still going on, atlas said.

The cost of the uranium shutdown includes reclamation costs and other liabilities and expenses.

Atlas said it expects sales of uranium inventories under an existing contract and proceeds from the tiquidation of uranium-related assets to largely cover the closing and reclamation costs related to uranium operations.

GenCorp Sells Bottling Unit

AKRON, Ohio — GenCorp Inc. said Tuesday that it has agreed to sell its bottling business to IC Industries Inc. for $395.5 million, as part of its expected asset sales to finance a corporate restructuring. The two diversified industrial companies also said that they would jointly sue PepsiCo Inc. to prevent that company from blocking the transaction. They said that the soft drink company, which awarded the bottling franchises owned by both companies, has vowed to block the sale with the assertion that it has rights of approval.

1C Industries, based in Chicago, is buying GenCorp's RKO Enterprises of Ohio. Inc., the subsidiary that owns the bottling business based in Fort Wayne, Indiana. The business serves more than 4 million customers in Indiana, Ohio, Virginia and West Virginia. IC Industries' Pepsi General unit serves eight Midwestern states, with 1986 operating profit of $55 million on sales of $542.5 million.

In April, GenCorp announced a $1.6 billion stock buyback as part of a restructuring to defeat a hostile takeover bid by an investor group called General Partners. The lawsuit charges that any Pepsico attempt to interfere with the sale would harm both GenCorp and IC Industries, that Pepsico is arbitrarily refusing to allow IC Industries to expand into new soft drink markets, and that such an attempt to block the transaction is No immediate comment from Pepsico was available.

"BALANCE OF PAYMENTS STRENGTH SETS STAGE FOR GROWTH"

Extracts taken from the address by Dr. Cerhard de Kock Covernor of the South African Reserve Bank.

of stockholders of the Bank on 25 August 1987 BALANCE OF PAYMENTS AND FOREIGN DEBT SERVICING

It is a motion of recorded history that other enjoying three gold "bonorses" years in 1979, 1980 and 1981, the South African economy was buffired by a series of adverse entermous economic and political developments. These events resided in a withdrawed by foreign bonis of credits to South African enterprises from July 1985, a substantial not suffice of capital in other forms, a depreciation of the fand, the imposition at the ent of August 1985 of a partial debt standard and the simultaneous resintendation of each organization of monorable to the transfer of the precision of the forms of adversaries. Since that time the provision constraints have been resinforced by selective de jure financial and trade sondiers imposed by some legislatures and/or governments.

The challenges poused by these adverse developments were dourting included. Most serious of at was the not capital outflow, including dobt repayments, of RESS bellow (LUSEZ) a billion) during the two years 1985 and 1986. But the facts now show that the South African economy one to the account and responded with an element supportable demonstration of balance of payments adjustment, strengthering of the facts of the sources, interest servicing and dobt repayments. In the way a solid foundation has now been taid for terrowed occroming expansion.

Current account surplus
In 1984 there was still a deficit on the current account of the botance of payments of R2,2 bitton. This deficit was transformed into a surplus of R3.9 bitton in 1985. In 1986 this surplus increased to R7.2 bitton or 5 per cent of gross domestic product — a high ration by any standard. Present indications are that, despite the projected rips in neal gross domestic product and therefore in imports, the surplus for 1987 as a whole will be between R5 and R6 bittion between U.S.$2.4 and U.S.$2.9 bittion).

Foreigns debts servicing.

At the end of August 1985, when the standard was first imposed, the total foreign debt of the South African economy amounted to U.S.$237 billion, by the and of December 1986 this figure had declined to U.S.$230 billion, valued at the debtar exchange rates that had prevailed at the end of August 1985.

In passed fact the propers of older repoyment stanted well before the standard was imposed and has continued other the end of 1986. All in all, the South African economy has now repoid about U.S.$4.3 billion of foreign debt since the end of 1984. Of this amount about U.S.$4.0 billion represented repoyments "inside the net". The remaining amount of U.S.$3.4 billion included net repoyments, "outside the net" of bearer bonds and notes, credits of the International Manetary Fund, Reserve Bank credits, and ordinary hands credits.

That South Africa was never overborrowed and is, in fact, now technically under borrowed, is aborroom any application of the accepted criteria for assessing a country's foreign debt situation.

Thus, for exemple, South Africa's total foreign interest poyments in 1985 amounted in 1985 and to the 1967 per cent of agoust and sortines, compared with an exemple of 27,6 per cent, and for 1987 is astimated of a mare 7,5 per cent.

Similarly, South Africa's ratio of foreign debt to total exports of goods and services, which even or is peoclessed from an overage of 27 per cent in 1984 to 355 per cent in 1986 and to extend on 1987. In contrast, the comparable ratio for Western Hernisphere developing countries deteriorated from an overage of 27 per cent in 1984 to 355 per cent in 1986 and no estimated 365 per cent in 1987.

Exchange ratios
From a low point of 36 US cans on 12 Ame 1986 the commercial rand appreciated to 50 US cans on 20 May 1987, before declining to its present level of around 45 US cents. Against a trade-weighted "basis" of currencies the rand of present stands about 25 per cent higher than on 12 June 1986. The financial rand also moved up from about 18 US cents at one stage in June 1986 to a peak of 35 US cents on 30 March 1987, before receding to its present level of around 25 US cents.

MONETARY AND RECAL STRATEGY

ACNETARY AND FISCAL STRATEGY

To what must the improvement in South Africa's external economic situation be orthodolic. One rescent rues the successful mainterance of low and order, and the resultant improvement in 1905 to ULS$337 per curso in 1995 to ULS$3369 per curso in 1995, and to no overage thus for in 1997 of ULS$424 per curso. Clearly, however, a major role was also played by the mandated policies pushed from roughly the middle of 1995, including the Reserve Bank to action in resident fifted or curso in 1995 to ULS$3369 per curso. In 1995, and to no overage thus for in 1997 of ULS$424 per curso. Clearly, however, a major role was also played by the mandated policies pushed from roughly the middle of 1995, including the Reserve Bank to act the current of border maning up to 25 per curs. This is the policy that the chipsches of eliminating overspending and producing a large surphs on the current account of the balance of poyments had been achieved. These laceurable results paved the way for the manhatery authorities to apply on expansionary strategy from about the middle of 1995 or cursor. This is basic role in stages from 2775 to 975 or curs. INVESTIGATED BUT STALL SEUGGISH DOMESTIC ECONOMIC

Given the forwards bolance of payments and domestic financial developments of the past year, the performance of the "real" domestic economy to date has been discoppointing. Technically the economy had been in a cyclical upwing since the middle of 1965. But thus for the promise of a regional speward thrust has not been fulfilled. Present indications are then while the growth rate of real grass domestic product will ensure 2 per cent in 1997, it may not need that 3 per cent projected earlier.

What has the upwing been so signified Why has provey been and change group in the financial markets instead of brids, market and these the financial sector is experiencing high blood pressure while the real sectoring suffers from low blood pressure.

Mondary policy will remost expansionary as long as the present situation persists. A new flower) target range was set in March 1987 for the rate of increase of M3 of 14 to 18 per cent between the fourth quarter of 1986 and teh fourth quarter of 1987, it is believed that the attainment of this target will be consistent with a projected further acceleration of real economic growth and a further ground decline in the quarter of this contains and an incompanies of the contains and the contact of inflation.

The adoption of this torget range for MS naturally implies that interest and each argue rates must be reasonably flexible and able to adjust to changing circumstances. If, this store, the descent for another the contact to the property of the present economic operating point momentum, a rise in interest rates with well form on exercise part of any package of monetary measures applied to provent the money supply from "overshooting" the target. Given the present pluggish state of the economy, however, interest rates are unlikely to show any pronounced upward tendency during the months cheed.

The Reserve Bank remains deeply concerned about inflation, but does not, in the present observed accumulations, favour a severe lightering of monetary policy in order to accelerate the process of reducing

The Baserie Bank remains deeply concerned about inflation, but does not, in the present obnormal circumstances, fovour a severe lightering of monitory policy in order to accelerate the process of reducing the rate of inflation.

The main cause of the temporary acceleration of the carmolised quanterly rate of inflation from 12,8 per cent in the fourth quanter of 1984 to 25,0 per cent in the first quanter of 1986 was (secreptionally) not exactly appropriate demand but the market depreciation of the extrange rate between 1983 and 1986. This elected that, following the approximation of the rand during the past year, the rate of inflation has showed down to around 15 per cent during the tits two quanters of 1987. Present indications are that it should desire still further in the period cheed.

The official each rage rate policy will remain and or demanded floating. The approximation of the rand during the part year was selectioned by the Searce Bank is an important desirable conditionally inflationary influence. G-10 Deputies Meet Next Week

TOKYO - The deputy finance ministers from the Group of 10 will meet next week in Paris to prepare for the annual meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World Bank at the end of September. Japanese officials said Tuesday. The meeting of deputy ministers will begin Sept. 8 and is expected to last two days, the officials said. The discussions will include recent developments on the foreign exchange markets, they said, but no substantive decisions on exchange rates are expected. The Group of 10 consists of ministers and central bank govemors from 11 countries: the United States, Britain, West Germany, Japan, France, Canada, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands. Sweden and Switzerland.

A Lawver's Memoir MovemenL By Martin Garbus. 305 pages. $19.95. Atheneum, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017.

TRAITORS AND HEROES:

A HANDFUL of American lawyers — Tel-ford Taylor, Ramsey Clark and Martin Garbus quickly come to mind - can often be found defending the rights of individuals in countries that do not enjoy legal freedoms. Ironically, they sometimes come under attack themselves for being on the side of the angels too fervently. Yet their advocacy can lead to catchup justice and telling books.

In Garbus's memoirs about the tribulations and triumphe of contractions to the tribulations.

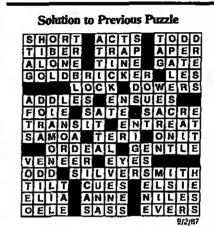

and triumphs of representing tough clients and causes, he tells of his involvement on behalf of Breyten Breytenhach, the popular Afrikaner poet who had been put on trial for treason. In 1977, PEN (the organization of writers and editors), the International Commission of Jurists, and the International League of Human Rights asked Garbus to go to South Africa and report on the legal proceedings.

Garbus, a former faculty member at the Columbia and Yale law schools, filed a petition seeking clemency for Breytenbach. Later, he reported that the Breytenhach trial was politically charged and judicially unlair.

In a surprising revelation that eppears in his admirable "Traitors and Heroes." Garbus writes that the New York City Bar Association, in one of its less heroic stances, threatened to disbar him because he had criticized the South African jurists. After three and a half years, the City Bar Association finally admitted that "there is no basis for taking action and there-fore the matter has been closed." Garbus had declined to remain silent about South African justice before it was acceptable to do so - a living example of being prematurely antipherable to the few. They learned, nevertheless, to give him what he gave as a kilted army corporal in Malaysia 30 years

Watch the veins stand in Wallace's neck and you cannot mistake his message. But words many of them, are Azkargorta's weapons. "When I speak to a player about music, literature, cinema, politics, whatever," Az-kargoria once explained, "I like to know more than he does. He will then believe I know more than he does about soccer."

It doesn't follow. Azkargorta, who has studied medicine, has been a remedial teacher in a Basque school and has made documenatry films; at 33, he has already coached Español and Valladolid.

"It would often please me," he admits, "in be a more typical trainer because I would suffer less. When things go well, it is good to be stypical; when things go badly being atypical is a defect."

Quite. Apart from an old knee injury to prove be played, Azkar-gorta makes another introspective observation: "Some say I would be more acceptable if I had had less university and more work -if in my free time I went to the casino or the brothels. Presumably then I'd be phenomenal?"

Meanwhile, be gets three days to transform Sevilla — bopeless odds since Betis had hired a new manager, Englishman John Mortimore, E full two months previonsly. Azkargoria inherits the squaddies of the most earthy of coaches. Sevilla lost, 2-1, on Sunday because of a nervous, possibly confused goalie and despite reasonable performances from Ted McMinn (brought from Wallace's Scotland) and Pablo Benpoeches, for whom Sevilla paid Wanderers of Montevideo $750,000 six weeks ago.

What price language? Indeed, what price culture in the schemes of soccer success? Talent you can buy, philosophy you can change. But to invest so heavily in one direction and reverse it overnight is a manic recipe for success.

Moses, Joyner Win First U.S. Gold Medals

The Assaulated Presi ROME - Edwin Moses, the old man of the sport, surged to the front early, then held off Danny Harris and Harald Schmid to retain his 400-meter hurdles title in a photo finish at the World Track and Field Championships Tuesday.

Another American. Jackie Jovner-Kersee won the second gold medal of the championships for the United States, but just missed a world record in the heptathlon. While Joyner bowed her head in weariness and disappointment. Moses was ecstatic after beating Schmid of West Germany and Harris of the United States. Moses, who celebrated his 32d birthday on Monday, strained through the final 10 meters and leaned across the tape to win in 47.46 seconds, .04 seconds under his own old meet record and the fastest in the world this year. "A very difficult race for someone of my age," said Moses, "My strategy was to get a good start, which I did. I took the 10th hurdle conservatively and bore down 'til the finish." Moses's was the first gold medal for the United States after being shut out on the first three days of the nine-day meet.

Harris of the United States and Schmid of West Germany also eclipsed the old record, both timed at 47.48, and Harris just outleaned Schmid to take second place. Schmid's time set a European record.

The Joys of Summer

By Russell Baker

New YORK — Well, here it is, the beginning of September, and as usual things are moving right along in the garden. Almost all the leaves are off the quince tree. or bush, or whatever that thing is with five pieces of hard-as-rock fruit growing on it. The leaves are starting to come off the coffee-bean tree too, and the sweet corn is all

Well, not dead, actually. You've got to have life before you can have death, I suppose, and nothing resembling life occurred in the sweet corn this year. It's the drought, Secand year of drought we've had. One of the big willows is now dead and the other two look like they'll be done for if the drought stays over

The cherry tree is dead, too, it looks like set decoration for the first "Frankenstein" movie, the one that opens in a graveyard on a cold dawn in February.

I went out there the other day with the boy to look at that tree. "Cherry tree's dead." I said,

"Sure is," the boy said. "Been dead since June of '86." "Get the chain saw and cut it down," I said.

"Can't," said the boy. "The chain saw's no good anymore." "You mean the chain saw's

"Well," said the boy, "what can you expect? It's the beginning of September, things are moving right

I moved some of the rhododendrons from under the tulip poplar.

The tree was hogging what little rain there was and the rhododendrons were just about dead, so I dug them up and moved them to the bed in the back of the garden where I've got the leaky-pipe hose buried so as to keep the soil nice and moist. Of course when I put the shovel in to dig the rhododendron holes, naturally the shovel blade sliced right through the leaky-pipe hose.

"I guess that just about ruins the leaky-pipe hose." I told the woman,
"Ruins it!" she said. "That leaky-pipe hose isn't just ruined.

you think that people with black thumbs ought to leave botanical doings to the folks on the Victory Garden ?" "Gardening is not for those who can't stand suffering," she said. Don't I know? This, as I told the boy, is why I never go into the garden without a complete beesting treatment kit, an antidote for poison ivy and an aerosol can of hair spray. This last is for protection against diving blue jays.

People think it's funny that blue jays dive at my head when I'm checking the garden to see what's dead. They thought it was funny when President Carter was attacked by a rabbit. I don't know about rabbits, but attack by blue jay, which is an enormous bird, is

To deal with them I get out the hair-spray can and give them a long burst of anti-aircraft spray, as it were. If you can hit them underneath when they're pulling out of the dive, the stuff glues their feathers so close to the torso that they lose mobility in their wings.

If you're lucky, one will spin in and crash now and then, and the cat will be standing by to teach it a

Did I mention the raccoon? It comes in during the night and eats the snails in the pond.

That's right. I told the boy, "It's a charnel house out here. They never tell you that on the 'Victory Garden, do they? They never tell you about the raccoon feeding on the snails, and the hawk eating the frog, and the tomato worms eating the tomato plants, and the tomatoworm parasites eating the tomato

"Speaking of charnel house," the boy said, "look at that praying mantis on the brick wall getting ready to eat that grasshopper."
"Not on my brick wall you don't!" I shouted, reaching the grasshopper a split second ahead of the manus and hurling it over the wall to safety. "That grasshopper you saved," the boy said, "could breed a plague of grasshoppers that will destroy nexi year's garden." "Exactly why I saved him," I said. "If the drought quits, we're going to need that plague to give us a real September."

Underwriters Gripe in Their Tower

By Steve Lohr

ONDON — For Lloyd's of London, the 300-year-old insurance exchange, modern architecture is proving a more formidable samble than insuring Betty Grable's legs or the space shuttle.

Long before Queen Elizabeth Il dedicated the new Lloyd's building last November, its hightech, steel-and-glass design — all pipes, pods, towers and tubes made it Britain's most controversial piece of architecture in recent Situated in the heart of the ancient City of London, the $250 million Lloyd's building, although critically acclaimed, has been likened to everything from an oil rig to a coffee pot.

Recently the aesthetic debate has been drowned out by increasing complaints about the building and its working conditions from the underwriters who make up Lloyd's and the insurance brokers who bring them their business. Some underwriters have even requested permission to move back into the 1958 building across the street. The Lloyd's management has just commissioned a British polling organization to survey the underwriters and brokers about their attitudes toward the building. The purpose of this study, according to Lloyd's, is to "identify as wide a range of views as possible prior to any decision on major changes to the current ar-

Most of the complaints concern the effect of the buildings multifloor configuration on the day-today working lives of the brokers and underwriters.

Some members of Lloyd's management suspect that the litany of gripes is mainly a smokescreen for a beartfelt asthetic aversion to the building designed by Richard Rogers, the architect best-known previously as co-designer for the Pompidou Center in Paris.

"It's a 20th-century building. and the traditionalists hate it that's the short of the matter." said David Larner, the spokesman for Lloyd's. "After all, we still bave people who complain has been forced upon us."

The atrium of the new Lloyd's keeps brokers hopping.

that we never should have moved from the old 1928 building to the one built in 1958."

Indeed, a strain of traditionalism is evident at Lloyd's. Nowedays, for instance, although bowler hats are about as common in London's financial district as rickshaws in modern Tokyo, a few bowler hats can still be seen in ing's glossy modernism, some people argue, has far more to do with being British than with being members of Lloyd's, "By and large, the British are a pretty conservative lot, and none of us like change," commented Richard Hazell, an underwriter. "And now this big change in our business

The resistance to the new build-

For his part, Hazell described himself as "bloody ambivalent" about the new building. However, be offered a guarded endorsement; "For me, it's fine because it works. And that's what matters to me, I'm interested in my market - not gazing at the floor or the Complaints about technical failures seem relatively minor air-conditioning flaws, elevator delays, a leaky roof and so on. Most of these problems have been quickly corrected. But the complaints about the new multi-layer trading layout are more substan-

There are four trading levels in the new building, compared with two levels in its 1958 predecessor. The roughly 400 underwriting syndicates, which mostly insure ships and their cargoes, are clustered in "boxes," or office stalls. on the four levels surrounding the 240-foot-high (74-meter) atrium. Brokers sbuttle among the boxes to bargain with underwriters who 'huy" portions of the insurance risk that a broker wants to "sell" for an issuer. The basic market structure has changed little from its humble beginnings at Edward

Lloyd's coffee bouse in 1688. By doubling the number of trading levels, critics say, the new building creates more work for brokers and hurts smaller underwriters. For brokers, the new building means more hopping from one floor to another. And at configuration makes it harder to quarters, spot which underwriting boxes are least crowded with brokers. Smaller underwriting syndicates complain that they now get less "passing" business, generated as brokers pass by among the larger syndicate boxes. The problem is most pronounced for syndicates assigned to the "Himalayas" the fourth gallery — where, they assert, brokers venture only

Regardless of the results of next month's sampling of senti-ment by Market & Opinion Research international, there is little chance that Lloyd's will move back to the old building. The rapid growth of the insurance exchange in recent years left Lloyd's times, brokers say, the multilevel virtually bursting out of its old
